My children realized they are not just students, but scholars. CAAP was the bridge they needed to realize their potential. It opened a world of opportunities for them in high school and now in college.

Our daughter now understands WHY she should do her best and go the extra mile to earn an A in a class. At a UC outreach conference, she heard UCLA’s Vice Provost of Enrollment Management say, “B’s are good, but UC’s are looking for A’s because A’s demonstrate excellence.” (She also met former CAAP scholars who attend UC Berkeley, Harvard, and Cal Poly.) Now our daughter studies with even more focus and effort to earn the best grades possible for her.

CAAP provides our children with the support, development, and resources they need to gain access to the best universities in the nation, and to be successful once they are there. Both of my children participated in CAAP’s programs, including the Legacy Accelerated Math Program, one as a participant and one as a tutor. CAAP provides a rare and invaluable service to underserved scholars, and its success rate is unmatched by any other nonprofit organization in the region.
